With all the glamour and romance of the “Old West” days in Abilene it was easy to overlook an obscure but far-reaching event that occurred in 1879. On an early spring morning, one of Abilene’s citizens stepped off the train after a business trip to the East and very quietly carried a wooden crate to his home. Abilene had received its first telephone.

A newspaper account on April 11, 1879, recorded the city’s initial reaction to its newest and most puzzling acquisition:

A few days ago, while sitting in the office of J.E. Bonebrake, we were agreeably surprised to hear Mr. Bonebrake’s little daughter playing a fine piece of music on the piano, at his residence several blocks away. We also held a conversation with Mrs. B., who was at home. Mr. B. has put up a telephone line from his office to his residence -- distance between a quarter and a half mile. The instruments at each end of the line are the invention of Graham Bell -- and known as the Bell Telephone. This is a wonderful age.

The preceding accounting helped Dale and Jacque Wallace complete the steps necessary in “marking” their home at that time, 316 N. Mulberry. The residence is one of four houses and a church that were built in the 1870s with locally manufactured brick.

When built, the Bonebrake house showcased many Gothic features including its steep roofline, but in later years underwent many alterations. At the time of its construction, the house was considered one of the more substantial homes in Abilene.

J.E. Bonebrake set up business in hardware and machinery upon his arrival in Abilene in 1871. His contributions to our community were extensive with one very notable structure being the Bonebrake Opera House on N.W. 2nd, built in 1879. Bonebrake eventually sold the building to A.B. Seelye. More recent Abilene residents remember the structure as the Plaza Theatre.

“Marking” historic buildings is one way people can help preserve the history of their community. The purpose of Abilene’s Heritage Homes Association includes maintaining a marking program and acting as preservation advocates in matters concerning city and county planning and zoning.

1. The first part of the document is a letter from the President of the United States to the Congress, dated January 1, 1861. ## STORY OF J. E. BONEBRAKE

Born in Indiana in June, 1848, J. E. Bonebrake came to Abilene, Kansas, in 1871 and set up business in hardware and machinery adding considerably to his stock as time went on. In 1882, he organized with A. W. Rice with Capital of $75,000 doing business of $180,000 that year. In 1871 he established the Abilene Water Works on N. W. Second and Walnut Streets. Water from a well pumped into a reservoir surrounded by maintainance buildings furnished the water supply.

In 1879, J. E. Bonebrake built the Bonebrake Opera House at a cost of $45,000 with magnificent storerooms on the first floor. The building was 75 x 125 feet with steam heat and gas lights throughout. Later he and Rice built another building extending from the Opera House to Cedar Street [Bonebrake and Rice Co.]. These operations are shown on the city map of 1886. The Opera House was later sold to A. B. Seelye for a theatre which remains The Seelye Theatre. Water works was replaced by Sand Springs water from springs and wells. Bonebrake was President of The First National Bank, Kansas Farmer's Mutual Insurance Co. and Abilene Water and Gas Company. [Information from Dickinson County Historical Society records.]

Dale & Jacquie Wallace
316 North Mulberry, Abilene, Kansas

The home currently owned by Dale and Jacquie Wallace, located at 316 N. Mulberry is one of 4 houses and 1 church that were built in the late 1870's with brick manufactured by the local brick factory. It is considered to be one of the more substantial homes of the era.

The following information is from the abstract:

There is no date listed as to when the house was built. However, in an article about Mr. Bonebrake it is stated that the first telephone in Abilene was installed in the Bonebrake residence in April 1879. This leads to the conclusion that the house was built in 1878 by Mr. J. E. Bonebreak. (Refer to the article about the telephone.)

The abstract shows that the property was transferred by Elvira A. and J.E. Bonebrake to Grace Bonebrake in 1894. Then in 1894 Grace Bonebrake transferred the property to Jane and John Cooper.

Eliza Murphy bought the property in 1905. When she died in 1928, the Murphy family gave a Quit Deed to John F. Murphy. This was dated Oct. 2, 1928. On Oct. 4, 1928 he signed a Warranty Deed to Stella F. Murphy.

Stella Murphy sold the home to John C. and Hazel Maholland in 1945. The Mahollands sold the property to H. L. Wright in 1949.

Dale & Jacquie Wallace purchased the property from H. L. Wright in 1970.

When the home was built it had a little porch on the south and a porch on the front. J. E. Bonebrake or John Cooper built on the wrap-around porch connecting the south side porch and east front porch and the upper porch.

Between 1915 and 1920, Eliza and John Murphy remodeled the house including hardwood floors and changing from steam heat to a furnace.

In 1948, John Maholland did a lot of remodeling. He tore off the porch on the south side towards the west end and built on a bathroom. The original bathroom was made into a walkin closet. He tore off the porch on the north side and built on a dining area. He changed the two windows on the front of the house into one big window. He changed the two windows on the south and north sides towards the front to modern squared sections to match the big window on the front.

He added a wall on the east side of the kitchen, put in a pantry and an entrance to the new bathroom. On the west side of the kitchen there were steps going to the basement and upstairs. He took these out, putting the basement stairs to the front of the house under the stairs going upstairs.

The door to the front livingroom was a double door from the entrance way. It was closed off on the west half to make a single door.

The door out of the second living room to the hall and stairs going up was also closed in on the back side and made into a closet. Doors were put in on the east and west ends of the hallway going to the back half of the house and along the stairway to upstairs. Also the kitchen in the upstairs apartment.

H. L. Wright bought the house in 1949 using the whole house for several years and then made it into apartments in 1967. He also put in a new furnace for downstairs and a furnace and air conditioner for upstairs that same year, lowering the ceilings in the dining room and the two living rooms to make room for the ducts for upstairs.

Sometime someone added the little porch on the west side upstairs and put in steps for an outside entrance., as well as a back entrance to the basement.

(Refer to the picture of the back of the house. This picture also shows the dining area that was added on the north side of the house in 1948.)

We bought the house from H. L. Wright in 1970 and continued to use it as an apartment house. We kept the upstairs bedroom to the front of the house as part of our apartment.

In 1970, we built a wall in the dining room to make a downstairs bedroom and a hallway from the front of the house to our kitchen. We took out the pantry and made a hallway to the bathroom closing up the doors from the kitchen and living room to the bathroom. In the bathroom we built two walls and louver doors and divided the room for a bathroom and utility room.

In 1980 we did a major remodeling - new kitchen cupboards, removed the whole bathroom, paint, paper, paneling throughout our apartment, carpet in both living rooms, hallways, bathroom, kitchen and dining areas, closed in all the outside porches, new lights in all the rooms except the front room and front hall, textured the ceilings in the two living rooms, hallway to the kitchen and bedroom, new ceiling in the dining area and hallway to the bathroom and utility room. We are now working in the front hall and stairway - it is all papered, textured ceilings and new lights.

We took out all the old duct work in the basement all the way down to the furnace and put in all new ducts for perimeter heating and cooling. At this time we put in central air conditioning to our apartment.

We also removed all the old style gutters and put on new seamless gutters, painted the house jamestown Red and trimmed the house with white. Storm windows and doors were added all the way around the house at this time also.

I changed the enclosed back porch into my office for my advertising specialties in approximately 1985.

In 1989, we covered over the old front porch with carpet and I built a new landing over the old steps out the back door on the side and put carpet on this, working on the roof to cover this.

In 1990 I added a wall on the back stairway and built a shed under the stairs for lawn equipment

CHAPTER I

EXPERIMENTATION AND MONOPOLY

Throughout the last half of the 1800s and on into our own twentieth century, the little city of Abilene, Kansas, has been written into American history in a big way. Forming the terminus of early-day cattle drives, Abilene developed <sup>as</sup> ~~into~~ a thriving cowboy and railroad center that satisfied every vice and desire the pioneer spirit could conjure up. As the cattle trade moved farther west, winter wheat was raised to take its place. Before long, Abilene became prosperous and respectable because of the "Golden Belt" of grain surrounding it.

With all the glamour and romance of the "Old West" days it was easy to overlook an obscure but far-reaching event that occurred in 1879. On an early spring morning, one of Abilene's citizens stepped off the train after a business trip to the East and very quietly carried a wooden crate to his home. Abilene had received its first telephone.

A newspaper account on April 11, 1879, recorded the city's initial reaction to its newest and most puzzling acquisition:

A few days ago, while sitting in the office of J. E. Bonebrake, we were agreeably surprised to hear Mr. Bonebrake's little daughter playing a fine piece of music on the piano, at his residence several blocks away. We also held a conversation with Mrs. B., who was at home. Mr. B. has put up a telephone line from his office to his residence--distance between a quarter and a half mile. The instruments at each end of the line are the invention of Graham Bell--and known as the Bell Telephone. This is a wonderful age.

You can sit in a room and converse with another person a mile or fifty miles distant. Wonders will never cease.<sup>1</sup>

J. E. Bonebrake was one of the leading citizens in town, making himself indispensable by selling the farm machinery that wheat growers needed. In time, his business expanded to include a hardware line, and he built a white frame store on the northwest corner of Second and Cedar streets. In July 1879, Bonebrake began construction of a magnificent opera house that measured 75 by 120 feet, just east of his old hardware store. The $45,000 building contained new showrooms for his business on the ground floor and a theater on the second floor with seating capacity for seven hundred people.<sup>2</sup>

In addition to enjoying the novelty of having the first phone in town, Bonebrake realized the practical side of the instrument. He could spend the long hours necessary for supervising construction of his opera house and still maintain contact with his wife and daughter at home. The telephones that Bonebrake used were not owned by him; instead, they had been leased from the Bell Telephone Company. This licensing company, in existence for only seven months, leased all telephones outside New England.<sup>3</sup> (See Appendix B.) He had gone to the offices at No. 95 Milk Street in Boston, Massachusetts, and, while there, signed a lease agreement, paying $20 for the two telephones.<sup>4</sup> His bill was payable semi-annually in advance, and he agreed to keep the instruments in good working order.

The telephones themselves were very historic pieces. They had been manufactured in the shop of Charles Williams Jr. of Boston where he was assisted by Thomas A. Watson.<sup>5</sup> The phones were in three separate units, all connected to each other by a series of wires. The magneto box had been developed by Williams and patented April 16, 1878. It contained the ringer invented by Watson, and from its switch hook hung Bell's wooden hand receiver.<sup>6</sup> The transmitter, which occupied a separate and smaller box, had been designed by Francis Blake. Although the Blake transmitter was developed using a carbon electrode, in violation of Thomas Edison's patent covering the use of carbon in a transmitter, the early Bell company chose to ignore the legal risks and produced this effective and vital part of the telephone.<sup>7</sup> By mid-March 1879, the first one thousand Blake transmitters had been produced, one of which came to Abilene.<sup>8</sup> The third part of the telephone set was the battery stand and the wet cell battery. Bonebrake's phone utilized a Le clanché Gonda battery that was advertised as being the "Standard Open Circuit Battery of the World."<sup>9</sup> The Bonebrake family constantly had to make sure that the battery's solution of sal ammoniac with zinc and carbon plates was in good working order.

Once Bonebrake had the telephones safely installed in his home and at the hardware store, his next problem was to connect the two with wire. Since his phones were grounded magneto, he needed only one No. 9 iron wire strung on glass insulators. The 1,025-foot wire was strung down the alleys and attached to buildings and barns wherever possible.<sup>10</sup> Today, we can only imagine the excitement and wonder that Abilenians felt as that first line went up. (See Appendix A.)

The second pair of telephones to arrive in Abilene were put into service the next year. These phones were radically different because they operated by sound vibration instead of magnetic induction. Shaped like two soup cans, this mechanical telephone system required nothing more than a wire stretched tight between the two metal cylinders. Their inventor, ~~W~~ Martin Hoover of Bushnell, Illinois, had received his patent on July 22, 1879, based on his inclusion of an air chamber at the end of each phone.<sup>11</sup> His air pocket diaphragm differed very little from the vibration phones that had been in use as novelty items over the previous 15 years. At the 1877 State Fair in Topeka, Kansas, vibration telephones had been demonstrated and were readily purchased, as one eyewitness recalled:

Great crowds gathered around the man on the sidewalk, and each one was anxious and eager for his chance to talk to and listen to the voice of the man on top of the bank building. Talking into the open end of the can and then clapping it closely to the ear to hear the answering words, each one had his turn. Of course, the words were faint, but they could be heard and understood, and the miracle of talking over a string 300 feet long was something to boast about to the less fortunate neighbor. The man on the street had a satchel full of telephones, and he sold them at 50 cents per pair; and he did a rushing business, too.<sup>12</sup>

The owner of this unusual brace of telephones was E. Fuller Parent, proprietor of the Star Grocery Store. Parent had arrived in Abilene in 1870 and, after building a "small cottage"<sup>13</sup> on Northwest Fifth Street, sent for his wife to follow him. In 1879, Parent erected a brick, two-story building with a wooden sidewalk and awning just one door north of the Bonebrake Hardware Store on Cedar Street.<sup>14</sup> One of his phones was located at the back of this store with a wire running in a semi-direct line to his home. The distance the sound vibrations had to follow was an amazing 1,050 feet.<sup>15</sup> Recognizable speech must have been very difficult to make out, so communication was probably made by tapping sharply on the receivers.

The third and final individually operated telephone in Abilene made its appearance in January 1881. The Gazette by this time had become used to the idea of people talking to each other over long distances: "Telephone connection is now established between T. C. Henry's residence and his downtown office--a distance of one mile."<sup>16</sup>

T. C. Henry had made history ten years earlier when he had pioneered the growing of winter wheat in Dickinson County.<sup>17</sup> Since the cattle trade had died off, the cash crop of wheat gave Abilene a much-needed shot in the arm and, as a byproduct, made T. C. Henry a millionaire. Abilene's "Wheat King" also wheeled and dealt in real estate and found it convenient to open a Real Estate and Abstract of Title
